The howl of a grey wolf is unmistakable. If you come to the zoo early enough in the morning you can hear our grey wolves Kali, Onyx, and Simpson howling to start their day! Wolves are pack, or group, animals and howling is a great way to solidify bonds between pack members, advertise territory, or just to have fun!

Historically, grey wolves (Canis lupus) lived all across North America and Asia. Today, they live in small populations in a fraction of their native historic range due to human expansion and hunting. Here in Montana, Yellowstone National Park is a crucial habitat for the recovering wolf population! Wolves are "keystone species" meaning that their presence is key to having a healthy ecosystem in the habitats they live in!

- Grey wolves don't have to be grey! Just like humans can have different colors of hair, wolf fur can be white, red, brown, grey, or black!
- Grey wolves hunt in packs. By working together, they can bring down prey as big as elk and bison!
- Grey wolf mothers raise their pups in a den in the summer! By fall the pups are big enough to come on hunts with the adults of the pack.

Color these two wolves howling to locate their pack members!
